The article in the print edition gave some tips for writing great theme copy, but sometimes it's helpful to see how the whole spread looks and really read the entire block of copy.

Did You Know?

on average, there were 17 desks in an elementary classroom

27 field trips in total on average... 2,700 books were checked out from the elementary school library each month

6 dress up days in the elementary in ONE month there were 11 hours of recess and 168 hours in class

7:35am

"I'm not a morning person, but I wanted the elementary kids to start their day with a smile because you never know what their morning was like before. So, I like to give hugs to the kids to help them start their day."
Mrs. Kimmy Campbell [F]

ONE. "I was so excited to tell my parents all about how we earned a fashion show because we had 400 kudos in the fifth grade. So we prepared for two months, along with the rest of our grade making crayon floats. I picked out the perfect green, gold and purple outfit. When it was my turn to model, every one of my friends cheered for me." Aisha Mattu [S] TWO. "I was kind of nervous to lead worship, but also happy. We practiced so we wouldn't mess up, and I sang my favorite song, "Faith." When people saw us leading worship, I think they were excited to see different people. After, I felt closer with the other people that were listening since we learned about God together!" Marleigh McWhorter [I] THREE. "We learned about the Indians during Indian Day. My favorite part was seeing the animals on the wall that weren't moving, and we got to make a necklace. Mine had red, yellow and orange feathers, and it looked like a sunset." Anna Claire [I] FOUR. "We had many dress up days like 50s Day. We would do things we could not do regularly like hula-hooping, dancing around and talking to friends. The days gave us a break from work, which I liked. It was one of my favorite parts of the school year." Stella Chance [2] FIVE. "I always had so much fun in my class. I loved to play with the toy cars and go outside. I got to ride my trike when I went outside and play basketball. Playing outside and with toys always made me happy." Ethan Tate [S] SIX. "I loved the CPA DEN'er because there was a dunk tank for [Headmaster] Mr. [Nate] Morrow, and I got to try to send him in the water. When he finally fell in, I laughed so hard. I also cheered for one of the football games. I was very proud of myself for practicing for two days to learn five cheers, and I danced for a fifteen-minute performance." Jenna Mathews [I]

Standing in front of the school at 6:45 in the morning, among Carter with friends and Kristy Kramer at the American Senior Service. Jackson Pflanz was happy to be there with her friends. She said, "It made me really excited about all that was ahead, and it was a moment of the school time because I showed you how close you have become to a lot of people."

Paying parking ticket number four and deciding it's time to finally buy a parking pass. Standing in line at Chipotle and deciding that today is the day to add guac to the chicken burrito for $1.29.

The choices we make change our perspective and help us create ourselves. Holding our breath in the bleachers as Antonio Chavez sinks the game-deciding freethrow against Chatfield. Counting laps for Madison Mix as she swims the 500.

It's the impact of Rebels working together that drives our athletes to victory.

Finding out running Trick or Treat Street is a bigger job than just dressing up and handing out candy. Seeing that there's more to dancing than just grinding by learning Merengue in Spanish club.

When we engage in new experiences, we broaden our outlook. Mastering chemistry with the help of Dr. Price's many, many sticky notes. Seeing our school through fresh eyes after Mr. Leyba's Columbine Unit.

Digging into our different classes, we become a generation of those who will innovate. From nervously lining up outside of the library on freshman orientation day to lining up with our class and throwing our caps in the air at graduation.

We evolve to prepare ourselves for high school and beyond.

We are not a product of the cookie cutter; because here, you learn early on that just hitting “copy” and “paste” will get you an automatic NC.

We’re completely ok with living off the Starbucks on campus because we need to pull ourselves through the day after that all-nighter for Nav’s notebook.

We welcome the wildcards, from the Tuesday morning turn-up to the powderpuff athletes.

From the procrastinators who swear they’ll never do it again to the perfectionists that erase the eyes on their portraits 30 different times.

We want to stand out, because here, you’re graded on your ability to make your ideas known.

We strive to go above and beyond, because just doing what the teacher asks you will only get you a P, and you need that AE.

We embrace that there’s more than just a little crazy in all of us.

Because the little things like “sleep” and “peace of mind” are overrated. Especially right before MGP is due.

Here, “off-beat” is just the beat we march to, so it helps when you

"The other kids were telling me Poly Club was a really fun club so I had to sign up," said freshman SARAH COMPIGNON. "You can use creativity and imagination to create your own story," said freshman FRANK. "We made a triangle trust bridge in order to redistribute the weight toward the top," said 8th Physics senior RICO LAM. "We want to let people know we're here for them," said 9th Computer senior ALISSA RIVAS. "I don't know everyone in my grade, so I'd like to get to know more people," said class president freshman ADAM WU. "I'm here to help," said freshman JESSIE. "Singing in front of people lets me express myself, and when people applaud for me, it's a really great moment," said 10th Choir singer senior NEX NEUBAU. "We were underdressed in league. My partner Katharine Jantarach and I never lost a game," said varsity girls' tennis senior ALLISON KING.

Everyone knows who we are. We're hard workers, big thinkers, award-winners. An undefeated varsity girls' golf team and a self-made, self-taught all-male dance group. It's no surprise that we go to eighth period tutorial three times a week, and it's perfectly normal that we spend half of it talking about that couple we just saw holding hands and the other half brainstorming the blueprints for our seven-foot-tall trebuchets. The few who wake up before the sun know all about 6 a.m. football practices, TOK debates and Carl Azuz' "Fridays are awesome!" We follow in the hoofprints of those before us: through the E-building maze, up-and-down the Gunn stadium steps, into the fit of the FAC. And every year we take our place in the Branding Iron stands, waving our cell-phone lights while praying for Trombone Chaos, screaming our lungs out as if the louder we scream, the more we win.
