GO MAD FOR MODS

Feature stories, events coverage and profiles are all important examples of how we capture the year in a yearbook, but mods hold the key to increasing the number of students and stories included in your book. And, great coverage makes a great yearbook — one that everyone wants to own.

"I like going to LA Fitness after schoo the University of Miami where I also play basketball with a couple of friends." day at weight training at my favorite gym. I workout to train for Fitness after school, which is just down th road. I usually do cardio workouts." outside of school?

Done right, mods can add creativity and layers of coverage to nearly every spread. Because they are varied and quick reads, mods fuel our interest and make readers keep turning pages looking for more.

Traditionally, most are related specifically to the spread topic, but some have standing labels that serve to advance the theme. Staffs often employ this mod type to make their books more inclusive. The ACD (all coverage device) may appear consistently in the same spot on spreads or may vary in size, shape and position. An ACD is not as much about covering more angles as it is about allowing more students to weigh in on a prescribed topic.

Why we love mods:

- Increase coverage
- Capture more voices through quotes
- Reflect the small moments that make your school what it is
- Make it easy to cover trends and opinions
- Add personality to spreads
- Provide contrast to longform coverage
- Carry the theme concept throughout
- Provide opportunities for visual interest and pops of color
- Allow you to make lower-quality photos look great
- They are easy to assign and complete, allowing several staffers to work together on multiple spreads

Square One

It's an approach to yearbook design that harnesses the power of mods. Take a look at the templates in the Square One section of the eDesign catalog and you'll see that each spread shares common elements: a dominant photo package, a dominant copy package and a series of mods, all separated by an equal internal margin.
